Schools to Stay on Schedule

Torrance schools will continue their present 10-months schedule rather than switch to a 12-months year.

Dr. Albert N. Posner, assistant superintendent for education, said that "right now we are not recommending a 12 months program," and that the district has not made any studies of such a program.

South Bay Union High School District is conducting a survey to determine parents' attitude on a four-quarter school year. Not Accepted

"We haven't done any research, but we have evidence from other communities which tried it, and where it was not accepted," Dr. Posner said.

Under the 12-months program, students take vacations on a staggered schedule with the buildings in use the year-around. Each student would attend school three out of the four quarters.

Posner said that presently the Torrance Unified School District offers 10 months of compulsory education and a six-weeks summer school which is optional.

The assistant superintendent said that one of the major objections to the 12-months program is that vacations occur at staggered periods.

A family with several children may find it difficult to take them all at the same time if they have different vacation schedules.

"You run into the problem of disrupting family life," the educator said.

He predicted that the district will be able to supply sufficient housing for all elementary needs unless the city changes the present zoning.

QUAINT COSTUME—Sadig Shitta-Bey exhibits native African costume to fellow students at El Camino College which the Nigerian youth is attending. Education here fulfills boyhood dream.

African Youth's Costume Admired by Classmates on El Camino Campus

Boyhood dreams, and five years of penny-pinching work in his native Africa to make come true—

That's the heart of the story told by Sadig Shitta-Bey, 24, as he stepped on to the El Camino College campus this week clad in the garb of his Yoruba tribe, to begin study in America toward an engineering degree.

Bey, as a boy, lived in Lagos, capital of Nigeria, on the great inner bend of the west coast of Africa. There he developed an admiration for America and a hope that he could go there sometime.

At 19, the native of Africa left his family, mother, brother and four married sisters, and went north to Monrovia, capital of Liberia. There he worked as clerk in a shipping company office and studied to determine how he could gain admittance to some American college. An El Camino publication came to hand, he liked what it said about the college, and he came here—by ship to New Orleans and rail to Los Angeles.

When he arrived on campus, he wore an ankle-length habit of smooth hard cloth, a knee-length poncho-like garment but toned up the front, and a peaked cap with triangular flaps at the sides. Cap and outer garment were of the same material, a stout cotton cloth striped in many colors. "The flaps of the cap," he said in flawless English, "were designed to protect the ears in cold weather."

The engineering major plans to retain his native dress while completing his college work.

Bey quit his job and left for America before he could save enough money to pay his way entirely through engineering school, and he plans to work part-time as he studies. For this purpose he hopes to make use of his experience in stenotyping. He expects to return to Africa after getting his degree and perhaps, working awhile as an engineer in America.

Crash Research Talk Slated by Safety Confab

Accident prevention in the space age, Sputniks in the home, safety behind the Iron Curtain, teen-age drivers and research on crash injuries will be among the topics discussed at the Fifth Annual Western Safety Congress and Exhibits to be held March 17-19 at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles.

More than 5,000 persons responsible for planning and executing accident prevention programs in communities throughout the West are expected to attend the three-day session sponsored by the Greater Los Angeles Chapter of the National Safety Council.

The Dentist Says: Return to Dentist For Reline

By DR. ERNEST J. TARR

"Should I buy one of the temporary relines materials sold in drug stores and reline my denture myself?" . . . asks Mrs. A. B. of Manhattan Beach.

After extraction of the natural teeth, it is normal for the gums to shrink. This shrinkage continues to some extent throughout life. Since your dentist made your plate to fit the contours of your gums at a given time, when tissue shrinkage occurs, your plate may start to loosen. When this happens, return to your dentist for re-adaptation of your plate as he thinks best.

Only your dentist has the skill and "know-how" to refit or rebase dental plates, should it become necessary. Don't attempt a makeshift job with so-called relining materials. These materials harden after application and may seriously interfere with the carefully designed contours and delicate measurements which your dentist constructed in your dental plates to insure a good fit.

In my office I am equipped to reline any denture in two hours. This is a permanent relining with the same type plastic that you now have in your denture. Phone me for the exact fee.

Good Tooth Care for Proper Health

"What is the best way for me to take care of my teeth now that I have had them all fixed up?" . . . asks a young mother from Torrance.

Home care of the teeth has three objectives: (1) Reduce markedly the intake of all sweets such as candy, cake, cookies, etc.; (2) cleansing of the teeth; (3) massaging of the gums. The latter is more important than many people realize.

Beautiful and sound teeth are dependent upon firm and healthy gums; Your daily massage can help improve local blood circulation, thereby increasing resistance to gum disease such as gingivitis, pyorrhea, and trench mouth. Normal gums should be pale pink; if they are deep-red, bluish-red or bleeding, chances are that gums and teeth are not receiving a sufficient blood supply.

Only with correct brushing technique can you take care of both objectives at the same time. Since preservation of teeth is my main concern, I give full instructions to my patients on the proper toothbrushing technique, demonstrating on them with the proper type brush.

Phone for an appointment and remember we are open every evening until 7 p.m.
